The idea is to look at your images, determine what you only like best about them, then apply those tweaks to repro purposes. Hopefully, that will give you the best color reproduction for your budget. In the next step, open the image and examine it as best you can. Some of you may already be familiar with the concept of "shadows & highlights" and "grayscale." Those are the most important areas to adjust – this process doesn't take much adjusting. To examine areas in the shadows & highlights, click on the channel tab on the image's layer.
