Drosophila melanogaster is a useful model for the study of pesticides effects in the field. This study aimed to establish a sensitive, cheap, and easy to carry out method of using D. melanogaster as a tool for risk assessment studies regarding two common pesticides: glyphosate and pyrethroids. Wild-type D. melanogaster (Diptera: Drosophilidae) was exposed for 24 h to sublethal doses of glyphosate (1.25, 2.5, and 5.0 mg L(-1)), or to the pyrethroid insecticides bifenthrin and fenvalerate (10 and 100 ng µL(-1)). After 24 h, males were transferred to an acrylic cylinder and observed for the following day. The percentage of live flies decreased significantly for all doses of glyphosate and for the highest dose of bifenthrin. In contrast, only the highest doses of fenvalerate (100 ng µL(-1)) significantly decreased the percentage of live flies. This study demonstrates that D. melanogaster is an important, inexpensive, and easily used tool for the screening of the sublethal effects of pesticides.Q: I couldn't have a good fit I couldn't have a good fit I wonder if that sentence is correct. If I want to express that I can't have a good fit, what should I say? Thank you for answering. A: I don't like the meaning of the sentence at all, even though it is grammatical. It sounds like the idea is that you have a good-looking friend who is a great dancer. The phrase 'I couldn't have a good fit' simply means that you cannot be friends with someone who is good-looking and also good at dancing. You could say: I couldn't have a good fit with a pretty girl who is also a great dancer or I couldn't
