It is common for gas turbine engines to include multiple stages of stator vanes that direct the flow of air through the engine. The stator vanes typically include an airfoil shape that directs the air flow. In some cases, two or more airfoils are joined to form a ring. Typically, the airfoils have an airfoil profile that results in an equal amount of pressure and low-pressure occurring on opposite sides of the airfoil. This pressure can create a circulation flow around the stator vane that can result in increased pressure and/or loss of cooling air. In addition, the stator vane typically uses turbine engine shrouds to protect the vane from hot air flow from the engine. The shrouds may shield the airfoil from the hot gas flow. The shrouds may also protect the stator vane from foreign object damage and erosion. It is with these issues in mind, among others, that the disclosure herein is provided.

Q: How to multiply a line by a value in a variable in awk? I'm trying to multiply every line in a file by a value that is in a variable. I can't figure out how to get awk to do this. Number is defined with -e option and line is defined with -F option. I've tried to put them in here: `BEGIN { NUMBER = -e $1 LINE = -F $1 } OUTPUT { gsub("^ *$", "", $1) print "{" $1 "}" $NUMBER " {" $1 "}" {" $LINE "}" }`

A: Use the variable declaration `BEGIN { ... }` as proposed by J.F. Sebastian in a comment. But as said, you won't be able to put variables and string constants in the same expression, as you did here with $1, $2,..., $NUMBER. You may write your awk script as follows: NUMBER = -e $1 LINE = -F $1 BEGIN { for (i = 2; i <= NF; i++) 04aeff104c
