Japan's Emperor Naruhito has been officially recognised as the new head of state of the world's third-largest economy, becoming the first reigning emperor to take the throne in more than two centuries. In a brief ceremony on Monday, Naruhito took his father's post and his own title, Emperor Emeritus, renouncing the names Hirohito and Akihito. His wife Masako bowed to him, and he kissed her forehead in an unprecedented nod of respect to his wife, after which the emperor bowed again to the massed crowd of court officials and dignitaries. "This is a great historic occasion. I wish for His Majesty's happiness as he embarks upon this new journey," Prime Minister Shinzo Abe told reporters. READ MORE: Who is Japan's new Emperor? Naruhito, who became the 126th emperor on May 1, succeeds his father who died in 1989 and his brother, Akihito, who abdicated in April. Akihito was the first emperor to do so in modern Japan and his abdication was the first by a Japanese monarch in nearly two centuries. Naruhito's ascension comes with a stark change in the country's constitutional rules. Under the new system, any emperor who ascended to the throne can only serve for life and cannot pass on his position to his descendants. The Imperial Household Agency, which selects the emperor, will also be disbanded. Months of speculation over who would succeed Akihito, as well as fears that Abe could repeat his predecessor's shoddy handling of the 1991 Gulf War, led to instability in the government. With Abe's landslide election victory in December, his Liberal Democratic Party secured a majority for
