The first argument that Bragg offers is that because the trial court immediately informed the court of the review it was undertaking of his burglary and assault sentences, the trial court necessarily was required to inform him of the standard of review that it would undertake when addressing those sentences. While Bragg has framed this argument as a constitutional one, he makes no argument in his brief that the failure to provide the required notice constitutes an unreasonable application of clearly established Supreme Court precedent. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1). Bragg did present one issue in his petition before the district court: whether the trial court erred in refusing to dismiss the burglary and assault
