Duty, honor, and dignity: nursing leadership and the professional's conception of self. This article analyzes the relationship between the professional and the nurse by analyzing the way the nurse-leadership relationship is analyzed and defined in nursing literature. The author introduces the notion of "the business of nursing," which he conceives of as a complex of experiences that integrates and shapes the professional identity of the nurse in modernity. The author argues that the professional and nursing role and identity evolve in tandem with the nursing work that they do, but that the tension between them makes them sometimes appear as opposed, even if the nursing profession simultaneously demands from them the very thing that has created these tensions..
