A growing number of proteins have recently been recognized to interact specifically with the 26S proteasome and/or the factor Arf1 GTPase. These proteins, which are commonly referred to as ubiquitin-like proteins (UBLs) or E3 ligases, constitute a new type of molecular switch of the cellular ubiquitin system and play important roles in several diverse cellular functions. The unusual structure of the recently discovered UBLs indicates the evolutionary emergence of a new fold that possibly represents an ancestral member of the p25/CAND1-interacting protein family (PCIPs).[Autoimmune diseases in the Netherlands: a 10-year study of prevalence and aetiology (1985-1994)].
