Photoshop CC 2014 brings significant benefits to professional photographers, including a new post-crop adjustment panel in Camera RAW, and a major performance boost. Additional features include a completely redesigned adjustment layer panel, and enhancements to the layers panel. You're welcome! The last version brought some tweaks to keep it relevant. This latest update seems pretty awesome, especially the speed. This new version will be installed as part of the new Creative Cloud. With the new features of Adabrite 2.0 and the additional features of this version, Adobe has made some huge changes in this version and also brought some new features with lighting and Visual Effects. One of the key features of this new version is that most of the settings are available at the glance by just the click of the F keys. The normal adjustments are available even in the Develop version. Loved the release of Photoshop PSX 10, really excited about the features. So for the version 10 of Photoshop there are tons of new updates overall. To start, we can already noticed the gain of speed with the new fixes in memory leaks. But the most of all, the biggest change in Photoshop PSX 10 will impact us, it will deeply change how we work. First, we can actualize the all-new De-Noise filter by just one click which is really powerful and quite faster. It also supports the 11 Smart Preset (your design is adapt to you) and the new Blend Area Mask. Another exciting feature is the new 3D Touch, not only onto the 3D viewport, all the tools, including the Brush and the Curves can now be touched also to brushes to work faster. The camera in the software is the updated with the BIClouds and now support the 3G/4G to work faster. It also can scale via the increase of speed as well.

Also within the Blend Modes tab you have choices like Pastel or Sepia. These help make sky work softer and blur out the horizon so the eye doesn't notice. You can use these to subtly blend in colors to make sky look more natural. Using the Eye Candy tab you can also add a glint to inanimate objects or make an image look like it was shot on a cell phone. It's also where you can use the Pen tool to draw in arrows, lines, or anything you want to add a more casual, hand-drawn style. As you'll probably notice though, Photoshop isn't really about drawing. To really do great drawings you probably couldn't do them using Photoshop. If you're looking for a way to add little contextual clues to your photos like that, I'd look at DaVinci Resolve Studio Each of the layers has strong normal and bump maps available so if you want to add a gradient to an area, you can experiment with different amounts of blending and transparency. A key setting when working with luminosity masks is that you can switch to per-channel masks. This lets you create masks for HSL, Gray, Sepia, LAB, and more. Combined with your color picker settings and color filters, this lets you create a wide range of masks. Luminosity masks also have a color range of black through nearly any color given you have a good light meter and camera. This gives you a lot of flexibility in how you blend the photo in this tool. Blend mode and opacity controls are a bit confusing at first. There are two settings for both. For example, I have a radial gradient under the layer of the overall layer and set opacity and blend mode to Multiply. In the layer inside that I have a hue/saturation adjustment layer set up. The hue adjusts the color, and the saturation helps out with the texture, too. The bottom of that layer has blend mode set to screen and opacity set to 0%. This means that the color is transparent over some white, which is how it will end up. Outside of this I have a layer with a radial gradient set to Multiply but with white color. This has blend mode set to Overlay and opacity set to 100%. Outside of the radial gradient I have another layer with a color adjustment set to screen with 95/5 opacity. For this layer I am using the swatch tool to change the colors of the gradient. There are so many settings and ways to combine them. I've always been a fan of setting up a library of colors and switching in-camera. You can also create the more crazy looking gradients by first going to the Color Setting tool to select which colors you want to use. e3d0a04c9c
