The original concept of The Misfits was conceived by John Buccellato, who conceived the series with two main characters, his wife, Lynn, and himself. The pilot episode was filmed in 1972 and was intended to be released to test the waters, as it were, but the test of the pilot was not a successful one. The pilot gained over 10,000 complaints from the public because of the graphic violence and racial slurs used. It was a more casual version of a story he had told before. One of the first major changes made was to change the aforementioned villains from a gang of white men to a gang of Mexican American gangsters. Due to the popularity of the show, the producers decided to use the characters as canvas on which to showcase the multiple characters of the members of the gang, like John and his wife Lynn, always referred to as "Misfits." John Buccellato was an Italian American from Florida, who initially wanted to become a member of the Mafia and eventually became an FBI informant because of his disapproval of organized crime. The idea of a team of four men came from a real-life incident, in which a group of five men conspired to rob a bank. The poor planning resulted in only one of the members surviving the incident
